Not So Good!

- New Xen.org site slipped

The screenshot shows the Xen.org website homepage. The header is dark green with the Xen logo and navigation links: SOFTWARE, PROJECTS, COMMUNITY, ABOUT, and LOGIN/REGISTER. The main content area has a green background with the text: "Xen® is the foundation for many products and platforms", "Xen is 9 years old, mature and its stability is second to none:", and "thus, Xen serves as the basis for many commercial server virtualization, desktop products as well as hardware appliances." Below this is a paragraph of examples of server and client products. To the right is a cartoon panda character wearing a blue jacket and a yellow conical hat, surrounded by icons of a laptop, server, and network. Below the main content is a "Featured Stories" section with a "Read Blog" button and a motorcycle icon. A featured story titled "Xen Hackathon: Thank You!" is dated "14 MAR" and written by Lars Kurth. It includes social media sharing buttons and a paragraph of text. Below the text is a large black box with the text "BE ZEN" in white. To the right is a "Latest Replies on Q/A" section with three replies, each with a question mark icon and a short text snippet.
